Louisville's First Families

Early Settlers Who Established Society Here, And Their Descendants Who Have Sustained the Social Tradition. A Series of Genealogical Sketches.

THE CLARK FAMILY.

KENTUCKY is justly famed for her hospitality, but an incident of inhospitality in a pioneer home on the Ohio river near Carrollton is the basis of an interesting anecdote for the descendants of John and Anne Rogers Clark, who emigrated from Virginia in 1784 to take up their residence at the Falls of the Ohio where a home, "Mulberry Hill," had been made ready for them by their son, Gen. George Rogers Clark. Mr. and Mrs. Clark, their children and servants, escaped death at the hands of Indians when Mrs. Elliott, the wife of a Capt. Elliott, who had frequently been a guest at the Clark home in Caroline county, Va., failed to extend the courtesy of her house and board to them on March 3, 1785, as they voyaged down the Ohio.

The Clarks had apprised Capt. Elliott of their plans to journey to the new settlement and had been urged by him to visit his home and to become acquainted with his wife and young daughter, of whom they had so often heard him speak. Although they left Virginia in October, owing to the bad condition of the roads, the inclemency of the weather, and the obstructions in the Monongehela, it was March when the party in boats arrived at the mouth of the Kentucky. John Clark and one of his men landing, went ahead to announce to Capt. Elliott the arrival of the party. Clark was greeted by Mrs. Elliott, who told of her husband's absence on a hunting trip. Abashed at the coolness of his reception Clark joined the travel-worn party in the boats and proceeded to Fort Nelson, where they were welcomed by the settlers.

Hardly had the Clarks resumed their journey before Indians on the war-path attacked the Elliot cabin, killing and scalping Capt. Elliott's brother, who, with several of his workmen, arrived immediately after Clark's departure to be mortified that his sister-in-law had not dispensed hospitality to the travelers. Mrs. Elliott and her daughter made a miraculous escape from the cabin to the river bank, unseen by the savages. They were joined by Capt. Elliott, who, returning unexpectedly, saw the warriors' canoes on the river and his home in flames. The Elliotts, having rescued the body of their kinsman from the ruins, embarked to seek security at Fort Nelson, where they were comforted and befriended first of all by the Clarks.

Mrs. Elliott offered excuses for her inhospitality, relating her confusion at the thought of receiving the Clarks in her crude frontier dwelling, knowing as she did the style and comfort of their life in Virginia, explaining that in years she had not seen any white persons save the members of her own family, that she was overcome with embarrassment at the encounter. She assured Mrs. Clark that she owed her life and that of her family to this breach of courtesy.

The pioneers, John and Anne Rogers Clark had ten children, six sons, five of whom were officers in the Revolutionary war, the sixth being too young to serve; four daughters, two of whom married officers, and two soldiers in the Continental army.

Gen. George Rogers Clark, whose history-making career is too well known to be repeated here, had been in Louisville long enough to change his residence several times before his parents decided to join him, having moved with the first settler families from mother, Mrs. William S. Bodley, to file a suit to prevent this use of her father's gift, for they had found the old deed which provided that if the city permitted any building, etc., to be erected, obstructing the view of the Ohio river from the donor's home, garden or vineyard, the property should revert to the heirs. Mrs. Bodley brought the suit and an injunction was granted.

There are no descendants of Gen. George Rogers Clark in Louisville, for that distinguished member of the Clark family was never married.

Gen. Jonathan Clark and his wife, Sarah Hite, had seven children, three of whom have descendants in the city. Their eldest daughter, Eleanor Eltinge Clark, married Dr. Benjamin Temple, the prominent Methodist minister, and their family also was a large one. Their son, John B. Temple, whose third wife was Miss Blandina Brodhead, was a prominent banker and man of affairs in Frankfort and later in Louisville, being president of the Mutual Life Insurance Company. His widow made her home in Louisville with her daughters, Mary Temple (Mrs. R. A. Robinson) and Miss Annie Temple, her death taking place last year. Another daughter is Blandina (Mrs. William Griffiths.)

Ann Clark, the third daughter of Gen. Jonathan Clark, married James Anderson Pearce, and to them eight children were born. Their son, Edmund Pearce, married Myra Steele, the father of Amelia Neville Pearce, who became the wife of George Weissinger, and of John C. Pearce, who married Susannah Steele. Mrs. Frank Sneed, Mrs. Nolan Milton and John Clark Pearce are the children of John and Susannah Pearce. Ellen Pearce married the lawyer, Judge William S. Bodley, and was the mother of eleven children, of whom the following survive: Martha and Ann Jane Bodley, who live together on Fourth street; William Stewart Bodley, and Temple Bodley, who married Miss Edith Fosdick.

Dr. William Clark, the son of Gen. Jonathan Clark, married Frances Ann Tompkins. He inherited the Mulberry Hill home of John and Anne Rogers Clark from his father and in turn bequeathed it to his daughters, Mary, who married Dr. George E. Cooke, and Eugenia and Eliza Clark, who never married.

Dr. Clark's daughter Ellen married Newton Milton, of Memphis, and her death occurred not long ago at the home of her grandson, Karl Jungbluth, Jr., in Garvin Place. William Clark married Annie Bailey, and was the father of Kate Clark, now Mrs. John C. Doolan.

Ann Clark, eldest daughter of John Clark, married Owen Gwathmey, and was the mother of eleven children. There are a number of her descendants in Kentucky. Samuel Gwathmey, who married Mary Booth, member of a prominent pioneer family, was the father of Rebecca Ann Gwathmey, who married Henry S. Tyler, of the distinguished family of that name and a descendant of the Oldhams. To Rebecca and Henry S. Tyler five children were born and a number of their grandchildren are prominent here. The oldest son, Isaac Tyler, who married Jennie Owen, of St. Louis, was the father of Owen Tyler, Rebecca, Mrs. Harry L. Smyser, Isaac Tyler and the late Gwathmey Tyler, who married Edmonta Robinson. Virginia Tyler is Mrs. William A. Robinson, who, with her daughter, Mrs. Spalding Coleman, makes her home on Fourth near Kentucky. Levi Tyler married Maria Lewis and was the father of Mrs.

"Mulberry Hill," a fine estate two miles east of the city limits, boasted a spacious double-log house, with a wide hall through the center. There were four large square rooms, porches and store rooms, with the kitchen in a separate building some distance from the house and near the spring.

Gen. Jonathan Clark, who came to Louisville years later than the other members of the family, had married Sarah Hite in Virginia. He built a home at "Trough Spring," east of Mulberry Hill. The Bernheim place, Shady-side, and the old Richardson place are part of his farm. A French cabinetmaker came from New Orleans to make the furniture for his use. His daughter, Anne Clark, who married James Anderson Pearce, came into possession of "Trough Spring" and used it as a country house, her home in town being on the River front. When old Fort Nelson was razed and the property sold, Pearce bought the land and erected a brick dwelling with an iron veranda, at what is now the corner of Seventh and Water. This home, in which the Pearce children were born, was torn down when the property again changed hands and the Burge home was built there.

James Pearce, who was a Virginian, a man of affairs and considerable means, presented the river frontage before his home, the two blocks of Water street and wharf, to the city, making a proviso in the deed which brought an interesting suit in 1880. In that year the C. & O. railroad attempted to obtain a right of way for a line along the river front and was bitterly opposed by merchants of the city who protested that the business on the wharf would be ruined by this arrangement. A number of indignation meetings were held, attended by business men of Louisville. Temple Bodley, a young lawyer in those days, a grandson of James Pearce, was approached by a committee of merchants to as-

James Franklin Fairleigh and Henry S. Tyler. Ella Tyler married Lewis H. Bond and her children who make Louisville their home are Isaac Tyler Bond, Etta, Mrs. Dudley Winston, and Joseph Bond.

Diana Moore Gwathmey, a daughter of Anna and Owen Gwathmey, was the wife of Thomas Bullitt.

Catherine Gwathmey married George Woolfolk, of the Virginia family which settled here.

Elizabeth Clark married Col. Richard Clough Anderson, who settled here in 1778. After his marriage Col. Anderson built a home in 1781, which was known as "Soldiers' Retreat" on the farm which is now owned by A. T. Herr. This country place appears on the first maps of the county. The Anderson descendants are prominent socially in Cincinnati.

Lucy Clark, another daughter of John and Anne Rogers Clark, married Major William Croughan, who had located in Louisville as early as 1782. Their home was "Locust Grove," the scene of generous hospitality. Here Lucy Croughan's brother, Gen. George Rogers Clark, died and was buried in the old family burying ground.

Fanny Clark, the youngest son of the four sisters, was married three times. The sons of her first husband, Dr. James O'Fallon, removed to St. Louis. Her second marriage was to Capt. Charles Mynn Thruston, who fought in the Revolutionary war at the age of 11 years 7 months and 3 days. He came to Louisville about 1793. To Fanny and Charles Thruston two children were born, a son, Charles W. Thruston, and a daughter, Ann Clark.

After Capt. Thruston's death, his widow married Judge Dennis Fitzhugh. Their three children located in Arkansas.

Charles W. Thruston married Mary Churchill, the daughter of Samuel Churchill, and a descendant of the Popes and the Oldhams. Their daughter, Fanny Thruston, married Andrew Jackson Ballard, grandson of Bland Ballard, the celebrated Indian fighter.

She was the mother of the late Charles T. Ballard, who married Mina Breau; S. Thruston Ballard, who married Sunshine Harris, and Rogers Clark Ballard Thruston.

Ann Clark Thruston, the daughter of Charles Mynn and Fanny Thruston, married Dr. Bernard G. Farrar, of St. Louis.

The Thruston home stood on Walnut street near Floyd, where the Ballard grandsons were born. The house was torn down in 1866 and on the site a home built by Andrew J. Ballard and his wife was completed in 1868. The house, now used as the Detention Home, was for many years their hospitable residence.

William Clark, the youngest son, referred to above as too young to fight in the Revolution, was the explorer of the Lewis and Clark expedition from the Mississippi to the Pacific, 1804-06. He was afterward Governor of Missouri.

Gov. William Clark married Julia Hancock, of Fincastle, Va., and his son, Meriwether Lewis Clark, married Abigail Prather Churchill, of Louisville. Meriwether Lewis Clark, Jr., who married Mary Martin Anderson, spent a number of years in Louisville. He was one of the incorporators and the first president of the Louisville Jockey Club in 1875 when the first Kentucky Derby was run, and served as a judge at the track long after the club changed ownership.

bath. And as they have gained ground, that holy day has gradually become more and more the time, when the lower orders have been let loose to corrupt one another.—It is also necessary to repeat the observation, that improper marriages have ensnared the wisest men, have always led to apostacies, and have tended to the ruin of succeeding generations. The children readily imbibe the principles of the infidel or ungodly parent, and soon forget the very language or appearance of piety: or substitute a corrupt religion in the stead of that, which comes from God and leads to him.—Mothers, likewise, have a vast share in forming the manners of mankind; as the care of children, in their tender years, is almost wholly committed to them. It is therefore of great consequence to society, that females should be educated with a view to this most important employment, and qualified for the discharge of their duty in it. Every wise man, in contracting marriage, should consider whether the object of his choice would be a proper person to entrust with his children's tuition: and every mother should consider, that this is the most important part of her charge, and most of all calls for assiduity, prudence and circumspection.—In opposing fashionable and reputable vices, conclusive arguments, vehement expostulations, apposite examples, awful declarations of the wrath of God, and solemn engagements, may have the proper effect upon some; but the magistrate must often use more vigorous measures. He must disgrace, punish, and chase away, the ring-leaders in iniquity, without respect of persons or families: and severity to a few will prove mercy to many. But in every thing the word of God must be our rule; the love and fear of God our principle; and his glory, in the prosperity of his cause and the welfare of his people, our great object. Whilst we labour in this manner, we must expect the enmity and opposition of a wicked world: but we may go on with confidence, in the spirit of faith and prayer. We may humbly hope that the Lord will remember us, and not wipe out our services, though defective and defiled; that he will spare us according to the greatness of his mercy, and accept both our persons and our services; and if he remember us for good, that will be a sufficient recompense and happiness for ever: whilst they, who impenitently sin against him, and especially such as disgrace a sacred character, will be remembered for evil, to their everlasting shame, confusion, and destruction.

79. 3. PEARCE, M. J., Nov. 29, 1834. On January 3, there appeared an answer signed J. E. K., giving information about Edmund Pearce and some of his family connections. That answer suggested that some reader might be able to supply more ample genealogical information about the Pearce family. This I am glad to do.

James Anderson Pearce, of Virginia, married Ann Clark, youngest sister of Gen. George Rogers Clark. Their son, Edmund Pearce, was born in Jefferson County, Kentucky, and this was always his real home, although for a time he was temporarily located in Hart County, where the settlement of some business matters required his presence.

In the office of the County Clerk of Jefferson County, Kentucky, in Marriage License Book 2, page 140, the record shows that a marriage license was issued to Edmund Pearce and Myra Steele, daughter of Richard Steele, on Nov. 11, 1834. They were presumably married that day, although no record of the license appears of record.

Edmund Pearce and Myra Steele Pearce, his wife, had two sons, James Anderson Pearce II, and John Clark Pearce, and a daughter, Amelia Neville Pearce I, who was named for her grandmother, Amelia Neville Steele, wife of Richard Steele and daughter of Gen. Joseph Neville of Moorfield, Va. James Anderson Pearce II was a member of Morgan's Command, Confederate Army, and was killed at the battle of Hartsville, Tenn.

John Clark Pearce died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Snead, on the Newburg Road, a mile south of Louisville, Sept. 8, 1932, lacking just a few weeks of being 92 years old. He was a practical farmer and was the first man to discover by experiment and to publish to the world the feasibility of raising two crops of Irish potatoes a year on the same ground instead of one crop a year as had been the universal custom.

The Jefferson County marriage records in the County Clerk's office show that John C. Pearce and Susannah E. Cooper were married Aug. 29, 1876. The latter was a widow at the time, her maiden name being Susannah Eleanor Steele and was a daughter of Col. Samuel Steele, of Prospect, Ky., and his wife, Ann A. Steele. Col. Samuel Steele was a native of Augusta County, Virginia, and was not related to the Richard Steele mentioned above.

John C. Pearce and Susannah E. his wife had three sons, William Bodley Pearce, who is married and now living in Louisville; John C. Pearce, Jr., who died some years ago, unmarried and without issue; and James Anderson Pearce III, who has never married and is now engaged in farming near Bloomington, Ill.; and two daughters: Myra Steele Pearce, who married Frank F. Snead and who lives on the Newburg Road; and Amelia Neville Pearce II, who married Noland S. Milton, of Louisville.

Amelia Neville Pearce I, mentioned above, the daughter of Edmund Pearce and Myra Steele Pearce I, was married Dec. 5, 1865, to Col. George Weissinger, late of the Confederate Army. Col. Weissinger was a son of George W. Weissinger and Amanthus Bullitt Weissinger, who were married May 20, 1829, as shown by records in the County Clerk's office in Louisville. Amanthus Bullitt Weissinger was a daughter of Cuthbert Bullitt, who moved from Virginia to Louisville in 1804, and Anne Neville Bullitt, who was a daughter of Gen. Joseph Neville of Moorfield, Va. Thus Cuthbert Bullitt, who became an outstanding citizen of early Louisville and was, with his brother Thomas, the owner of large tracts of land here, the present Central Park being a part of one tract, and Richard Steele, above mentioned, were brothers-in-law, both having married daughters of Gen. Joseph Neville.

Col. George Weissinger and Amelia N. Pearce Weissinger, his wife, had one daughter, Amelia, who married J. Hoadley Cochran, of Louisville. J. Hoadley Cochran and Amelia Weissinger Cochran, his wife, had one daughter, Hattie Hoadley Cochran, widely referred to as The Little Colonel because she was portrayed as the heroine in a juvenile book of that name. Hattie Hoadley Cochran married Albert C. Dick, Oct. 3, 1912. They and their children are living in Louisville.

The late Harry Weissinger, well known citizen and capitalist, some of whose descendants still live in Louisville, was a full brother of Col. George Weissinger, whereas the Hon. Rozel Weissinger was a half-brother.

Pearce, U.S.M.A., West Point, New York, and William Pindell Pearce, and brother of Mrs. Charles M. Busbee, Trenton, N. J.; Mrs. Frank A. Snead, Bloomington, Ill. and James A. Pearce, Bloomington, Ill. Funeral from the residence Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock. Interment in Cave Hill Cemetery.

Frank F. Snead

Frank Flusser Snead, 64, of 3318 Linnet Road, Louisville, Ky., retired coal executive, died at 6 a. m. Sunday, Feb. 6, in St. Joseph's Infirmary, Louisville, where he had been under treatment during the last three weeks.

Mr. Snead, a native of Louisville, was educated in the public schools here. He, with the late Kenneth Meguire, organized the Snead-Meguire Coal Company, which later became the Harlan Coal Company.

Mr. Snead was a veteran of the Spanish-American War. He was president of the Pendennis Club in 1926-27, was a member of the Audubon Country Club, and was a member of St. Paul's Episcopal Church.

Survivors are his wife, Mrs. Myra Pearce Snead; a brother, Thomas S. Snead, and a sister, Mrs. Julia Virden, Chicago. Funeral services were arranged for 3 p. m., Monday, Feb. 7, at Pearson's, 1310 S. 3d, with burial in Cave Hill Cemetery.

Mr. Snead, with the aid of the late K. U. Meguire, was an active coal property developer in the Harlan County fields and also a large distributor of coal. Later the same interests developed the Dawson Daylight mines, strip operations, in western Kentucky, which eventually turned to underground mining.

JOHN PEARCE, JR., TAKEN BY DEATH

After a protracted illness, John Clark Pearce, Jr., 47, member of a pioneer Kentucky family, died late Tuesday afternoon at his home on Preston-street road, about three miles from Louisville.

Mr. Pearce was a great-great-grandson of Jonathan Clark, eldest brother of George Rogers Clark, founder of Louisville, and devoted his entire life to scientific farming.

Mr. Pearce was born at Matherly Hill in Jefferson county June 26, 1879, the son of John C. and Susannah Steele Pearce. In addition to his widow, Mrs. Henrietta S. Pearce, he is survived by two sons, John C. Pearce III and William Steele Pearce; three sisters, Mrs. Charles M. Busbee of Fort Leavenworth, Kan.; Mrs. Frank Snead and Mrs. Noland S. Milton, and three brothers, Arthur, of Montgomery, Ala.; William Bodley and James Anderson Pearce of Bloomington, Ill.

INTRODUCTION

NEW TESTAMENT.

Mrs. Sarah Pearce Sneed
Aug 10 - 1779

THE Church, from the earliest antiquity, hath called this part of Scripture on which we now enter, 'The New Testament,' or, 'The New Covenant.' for the word may be translated either way, as it signifies sometimes a stipulation between two, or more, contracting parties; at others, the absolute appointment of a person, in those matters that are entirely at his own disposal; and more rarely, a last Will and Testament, by which a man appoints his heirs, and the way in which the inheritance is to be obtained and enjoyed. It is called "The New Testament," in contra-distinction from 'the Old Testament,' not as if the one contained only the old covenant of works, and the other the new covenant of grace; for the contrary hath already been abundantly shewn: but because the New Testament gives an account of the abrogation of the old dispensation, and of the introduction of a new and better dispensation. The Mosaic law, the national covenant made with Israel, and the Levitical priesthood, formed, as it were, an edition both of the covenant of works and of the covenant of grace: but at the coming of Christ, the end being answered, this was antiquated and abrogated; and the Christian dispensation, containing clearer light and greater encouragement not attended with burdensome ceremonies, or clouded by types and shadows, or restricted to any place or nation, formed a new edition of the covenant of grace; yet so, that unbelievers continue, as of old, under the ministration of death, the covenant of works. This dispensation therefore is compendiously called "The New Covenant," or, 'The New Testament,' with reference to the death of Christ, the Testator.

The history, contained in this part of Scripture, is an exact counterpart of the prophecies, promises, and types of the Old Testament, in respect of its grand Subject, the great Redeemer, and his kingdom and salvation. An enlightened student of the Old Testament, before the coming of Christ, must have expected exactly such events, and such changes in the outward state of the Church, as the New Testament records: and the sole reason why the Jews in general, and the apostles in particular for a time, did not expect such events and changes, is this: "their understandings were not opened to understand the Scriptures." A careful and constant examination of the sacred volume, diligently comparing one part with another, renders this clear and manifest: insomuch that it is possible, and perhaps not very difficult, to form a connected narrative of all the grand outlines of the history contained in the New Testament, from the very words of the Old Testament. The person of the Redeemer, as Emmanuel; his descent in human nature from Judah and from David, when the family was reduced to poverty and obscurity; his miraculous conception; his birth at Bethlehem; his character, miracles, and doctrine; the reception given him by his countrymen; the unparalleled contempt and enmity shewn him; the manner, and all the circumstances of his death and burial, even to minute particulars; the end and design of his sufferings and death, his resurrection, ascension, the pouring out of the Holy Spirit; the conversion of vast multitudes; the obstinate unbelief and opposition of the Jewish nation; the tremendous judgments of God on them, for these crimes; the abrogation of the ceremonial law; the destruction of Jerusalem and the temple; the calling of the Gentiles; the glorious triumphs of Christianity, and indeed the state of the Church, through all intervening ages till the consummation of all things, might be related in the words of the prophets, only by substituting in a few instances the past for the future tense. To so astonishing a degree do the two divisions of the sacred Scriptures confirm and illustrate each other! And let it here be observed in general, that the writers of the New Testament always quote and refer to the several books of the Old, as divinely inspired, as "the oracles of God," as "the Scripture that cannot be broken;" and never, as if they supposed any part of
